It's hard to imagine a bigger win-win situation for dancers and dance fans than the Vision Series. Audiences enjoy a bargain-priced evening of hand-picked, quality dances in the large and comfortable Cowell Theater; emerging choreographers get a much-needed forum for trying out or refining their work; established companies keep up their chops (and stay on local radar screens in what might be their off-season); and the next generation of dancers, selected from Bay Area high schools, gets the rare opportunity to perform with and receive feedback from the pros. Part woodshed, part workshop, and one hell of a kinetic workout, it's far from your average recital. (JU)
